

Applied Technology in Education Graduate Certificate

WilmU's Applied Technology in Education graduate certificate can help deepen your knowledge of technology resources so you can facilitate educational opportunities using mobile devices, design online courses, understand cloud-based computing and applications, and develop multimedia instruction. Use these skills to become a technology leader in your K-12 classroom, school, or district, or to become a corporate trainer in your organization, college, or university.

You can apply these courses and their credits to WilmU's MEd in Applied Technology.

The standards and program competencies adopted for this certificate are the National Educational Technology Standards for Teachers (NETS-T) issued by the International Society for Technology in Education in 2008. To qualify for this graduate certificate, a candidate must successfully complete the 15 credits and petition for the certificate.

Note: Completion of this certificate does not qualify the recipient for a Delaware teaching license, endorsement or certification, since there is no applicable Delaware licensing category.
